INTRODUCING ANIKET NADKARNI

Joining ACM Parts as the National Channel Manager was the natural next step in Aniket Nadkarni's career.

"I've grown up working with cars so it's always been a personal goal to work in the automotive space," Aniket said. "I have an extensive background in supply chain management. And when I heard a national automotive business was being set up in Melbourne, I jumped at the chance."

Since signing on last year, Aniket has been impressed with the immediate impact the start-up company has had in the automotive sector. "We're increasing competition in the market by supplying high quality automotive parts at reduced cost. The cost of repairs is subsequently reduced and hopefully this will bring down the cost of insurance premiums for consumers," he said.

A big part of ACM Parts' edge in the market stems from its certified parts program, which rigorously tests after-market automotive parts to make sure they are equal in fit, form and function to the original parts sold by the dealerships.

Aniket has been instrumental in driving the ACM Certified Parts program, from negotiating prices with manufacturers to overseeing the distribution of certified parts to warehouses around Australia.

"ACM Parts' certified after-market parts range is a real game changer – no one else in the country is testing after-market parts in Australia on Australian vehicles."

Over time, Aniket has also started to look after some of the company's biggest accounts, working with different industries to reduce the cost of their parts spend. He said because ACM Parts was growing rapidly, there were opportunities to excel and take on responsibility that weren't always possible in larger corporates.

"It's been a great opportunity for me. Within 12 months I've been able to extend my original role, and as the company continues to grow, opportunities like this will keep on coming. We're employing people who show drive and passion to go out and really build something. So it's warming to know that everyone is on the same page."

NSF SURVEY WINNER

At ACM Parts, we really want to know what our customers think because honest feedback helps us build our business. We appreciate every customer who takes the time to fill out our Customer Feedback Survey. Victorian Sales Rep Jon Torwick headed out to Mitcham this month to say a big thank you and congratulations to Jason Trewin, Branch Manager at SmashCare Smarta Repair Specialists, who won an Apple iPad for sharing his feedback!
